

ED.M. IN COLLEGE STUDENT AFFAIRS

- I. PROGRAM DESCRIPTION: The 39-credit master's degree program in College Student Affairs (CSA) prepares students to enter professional positions in student affairs at a variety of postsecondary institutions. Learning opportunities for students include combinations of classroom instruction, project-based learning, field experiences, internships, and individualized learning. CSA students pursue a rigorous program of academic study combined with practicum and internship experiences that enable them to focus on their particular areas of interest or gain experience across a variety of student affairs programs.

The CSA program has an applied focus—the integrated learning experience helps students develop the requisite knowledge, skills and work experience to be successful student affairs professionals and leaders. Student Affairs professionals work directly with students in a wide range of specialty areas that include, but are not limited to: housing and residence life, campus unions or student centers, student activities, volunteer student services, educational programming, counseling and advising, career development and placement, new student orientation, admissions and enrollment management, services for students from underrepresented groups, retention programs, assessment offices, parent and family programs, student judicial programs, service learning, academic advising, disability services, fraternity and sorority affairs, campus recreation programs, veterans services, cultural centers, and health and wellness services.
