*Reading Reimagined: Weaving Word
Recognition and Language
Comprehension for Effective Literacy
Instruction
(The Science of Reading)*

What does it take to ensure that the vast majority of children learn to read? What do we know, for sure, that must be included in reading instruction? If these are the questions that keep you awake at night, this session is for you. We'll explore literacy learning and foundational skills for readers. But we will also explore verbal reasoning and the theory of mind that is required to produce amazing readers.

The session will focus on two major strands of reading development recognized in the Science of Reading: Word recognition and language comprehension. Weaving these together is critical if we are going to effectively answer the daunting questions about teaching reading well.
